

FEBRUARY 2026

A Century of Black History Commemoration

Black History Month is a time to honor the strength, struggles, resilience, lives and achievements of African Americans. This year marks the 100th anniversary of the first celebration of Negro History Week, established by Carter G. Woodson in 1926, which laid the foundation for what is now Black History Month.

Over the last century, Black history has been preserved, expanded, and propelled by scholars, activists, artists, and everyday community members who refused to allow truth to be erased. Their efforts have shaped how the past is remembered, how the present is understood and how the future is imagined.

Protecting Our Hearts: Recognizing American Heart Month

February marks American Heart Month, a time to highlight the importance of heart health—especially within Black communities. According to the American Heart Association's 2025 Heart Disease and Stroke Statistical Update, Black communities in the U.S. continue to face disproportionately higher risks of heart disease, stroke, and hypertension. Factors such as high blood pressure, diabetes, chronic stress, and limited access to healthcare contribute to these disparities, making heart health awareness and prevention especially critical.
